She declined to say when the craft was launched, but a British space watcher said he and coleagues in Sweden believed the craft was put into orbit at 1853 GMT yesterday.

The launching of a manned spacecraft had been widely predicted here following the Salyut venture, which a top Soviet space official said yesterday was equipped for both automatic and manned flight.

. At a press conference for visiting journalists yesterday, academician Boris Petrov, chairman of the Intercosmos Council of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, said that only if the Salyut systems proved satisfactory would a crew

As a result of the anticipated congressional cuts, Pentagon officials said, little would be left over in the military aid fund for new equipment such as tanks, armored personnel carriers, weapone and airplanes. One possibility, officials said.

Parley Commits Big Two to Seek New Arms Curb

By John Herbers

MOSCOW, July 3 (NYT).-President Nixon and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev, failing to devise a permanent agreement on limit-ing nuclear strategic arms, signed today a joint communiqué that committed the two sides to negotiate for a less ambitious accord that would expire in 1985.

After a friendly but restrained signing ceremony in a baroque chamber of the Kremlin, St. Vladimir's Hall, the two leaders ended their third summit meeting and Mr. Nixon departed for the United States. At the sirport, Mr. Nixon shook hands with Soviet officials, diplomats and a crowd of Russians before bidding farewell to Mr. Brezhnev, President Nikolai Podgorny and Premier Alexei Kosygin. As he and Mr. Brezhnev parted, Mr. Nixon was smiling but the 67-year-old Soviet leader looked more sober than when the American chief executive arrived here last Thursday. The communiqué language on controlling offensive strategic weapons represented the minimum progress that American officials had hoped for when the summit meetings opened six days ago. It said that an agreement on limiting such arms should be completed before the expiration in 1977 of the interim agreement reached in the first summit here two years ago.

Although this summit's six days of talks here and in the Crimea produced agreements on reducing permissible anti-ballistic missile complexes, on limiting underground nuclear testing and on a range of economic, health, and cultural issues, there was clear disappointment over the failure to achieve a breakthrough on the crucial issue of controlling offensive weapons. The two leaders had pledged a year ago to try to reach such an agreement in 1974, but today Secretary of State Henry Kissinger indicated that the soonest possible date was 1975. In a news conference called to describe the work of the summit, ment is not reached well before 1977, there will be "an explosion of numbers and of technology" so that "one of the questions we will have to ask ourselves is what in the name of God is strategic superiority?"

The communique said that President Nixon and Mr. Brezhnev conducted a frank and thorough review of the problems of limiting strategic arms, "They concluded that the interim agreement on offensive strategic weapons should be followed by a new agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States on the limitation of strategic arms,' the communique declared.
"They agreed," it said, "that such an agreement should cover the period until 1985 and deal with both quantitative and qualitative limitations. They agreed that such an agreement should be completed at the earliest possible date, before the expiration of the interim agreement."

It was announced that the American and Soviet delegations will reconvene in Geneva around Aug. 1 to proceed with negotiagrowing out of the meetings which ended today. But officials said that, contrary to American hopes, the two leaders had not agreed on a common mandate to their negotiators.

[On arriving back in the United States tonight, Mr. Nixon, in a nationally televised address, said his was "a journey that has advanced the cause of peace in the world." [Speaking from an open hangar at Loring Air Force Base, in Maine, during a refueling stop, the President said new patterns of foreign policy are emerging around the world, holding out bright hopes for a generation of peace. He added that his admin-istration has been charting a new relationship with the Soviet Union and that this bond was advanced

On his return to the United States Mr. Nixon still faced the possibility of impeachment and an uncertain future as to his ability to continue the détente he set in motion with the Communist world in his first term in office.

One of his aims at this summit was to make it impossible for a White House successor to reverse the process of detente. Yet the communiqué, which called détente imperative, seemed to acknowledge the fragility of the detente effort. "Both sides are convinced of the imperative necessity of making the process of improving U.S.-

Soviet relations irreversible," the document said. "They believe that as a result of their effort. a real possibility has been created

In Geneva, the Moscow summit agreement came under predictable criticism at the 25-na-

Ambassador Masahiro Nisibori have a little more than this. One hundred fifty kilotons is pretty big. The Indian test was only 15 kilotons. Then there is the time limit. of the Stockholm Peace Research Institute whether the new accord will reduce significantly the number of underground tests. Provisional data for 1973 in dicate that only one of nine U.S.

tests was definitely above the 1976 ceiling of 150 kilotons. Of the 14 Soviet tests, two were listed as in the 3.000-6.000 kiloton French underground tests in 1962 in the Sahara were of a considerably lower yield and so was the lone Chinese underground explosion, registered in 1969, according to the institute.

WASHINGTON, July 3 (UPI).

-Paul Nitze, who resigned last month from the U.S. negotiating team at the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, told the House Arms Control subcommittee yesterday that while the U.S. goal was a "single integrated document" to replace the five-year agreement of 1972, "the Soviet strategy is to deal with each segment of the problem piecemeal, inhibiting a U.S. response to the imminent deployment of the Soviet Union's new and much more effective" missiles

U.S. Gold Could Be Put on Market

WASHINGTON, July 3 (AP. DJ) .- Treasury Secretary William Simon indicated today that the Treasury may begin selling some of its gold stockpile whenever gold ownership is legalized in the United States.

He said, however, that the Nixon administration does not favor setting a deadline for legalizing gold ownership, as bills passed by both the House and Senate have done.

Mr. Simon said it is still the U.S. goal to have gold phased out of the international monetary system, and there are still a number of questions to be dealt with -such as how and when the Treasury will sell gold on the open market. Mr. Simon said the administration may ask Congress later this year to extend the gold ownership ban if "extraordinary conditions" such as international monetary disturbances make it necessary. The House has passed a bill that would end the ban on gold ownership by Dec. 31, while

This was never a very valid proposition, and the Russians may have decided that they must concentrate on catching up in the short run in order to bargain on a more equal footing later.

Whatever happened in the talks here, the Russians have decided to declare them a success. The summit "went normally." said Boris Ponamarev, a candidate member of the ruling Polithuro. The normality seemed to please the Soviet

Before the summit, Russian officials made it clear that they did not expect dramatic results. The main objective, they said repeatedly, was to make these summit meetings regular, normal happenings and to give "new impulses" to the process of de-tente. The summit's modest achievements lived up to those modest expectations.

Wait and See' "We have to wait and see what happens to Nixon," a Soviet official said, predicting that more substantial agreements on controlling nuclear weapons might follow relatively quickly if the Washington-or if he were forced "We won't care if from office. This is a relatively new attitude in Moscow. There was a time when Soviet officials feared that Watergate was the work of enemies c." détente, and a time, too, when this summit seemed in jeopardy because of Watergate. The Russians were relieved that it took place at all, and pleased that Mr. Nixon came to Moscow with broadly-based domestic support for his foreign policies.

today that before the summit began, Mr. Nixon transmitted new proposals to Moscow on nuclear arms limitations. Since no new agreements on this subject were reached, the Russians apparently rejected Mr. Nixon's suggestionsperhaps at yesterday's meeting of the Politburo.

Asked if this were the case, a well-informed Soviet journalist replied obliquely: "It's better this way for President Nixon," Like many other Russians, the journalist expressed the view that for Mr. Nixon the ideal result of the summit would be something between dramatic success and obvious failure. Pentagon Pressure

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said before the summit began that "the President will not inhibited" in Moscow by the Watergate problem. Whether he was or not, the Russians coviously perceived a weakened Nixon and acted accordingly.

Watergate was not the only reason for this Soviet approach. Your Pentagon is a problem," a senior Moscow official observed. Mr. Schlesinger's new doctrines have made the situation more complicated. Neither side was prepared to make the concessions necessary for a new agreement

The Russians' view was that Pentagon pressure, often expressed by Sen. Henry Jackson. D-Wash., has limited Mr. Nixon's options in the strategic arms

However, Soviet officials at today's reception shared a general optimism that the process of détente will continue, and that new strategic-arms agreements

The achievements announced the communiqué today included the following: · A treaty, which will require

Senate ratification, prohibiting underground nuclear tests exceeding 150 kilotons, the equivalent of 150,000 tons of TNT. Effective not cover tests involving peacefull nuclear programs. Although some U.S. explosions have exceeded the 150-kiloton threshold, American officials have said that the level is far above what either side considers necessary for most tests. The real breakthrough for the United States was that Mr. Brezhnev agreed in principle to on-site inspection of "peaceful" explosions under an agreement yet to be worked out. The Russians had long opposed any such inspection.

· Two protocols limiting each side to a single deployment area for anti-ballistic missiles. The previous agreement, a treaty signed in 1972, limited each country to two such areas. The amendments will require Senate ratification. Mr. Kissinger said that although ABM limitation is not the central issue of the arms race. the agreement "has profound strategic consequences which are sometimes lost sight of."

dence of a major behind the scenes struggle over Peking's three-week-old poster campaign emerged yesterday with the appearance of fresh sheets denouncing the local Communist party bosses for the continuing harass ment of individuals who speak out against them.

Two new posters on the walls opposite the headquarters of the Peking Municipal Revolutionary Committee—the nity half—accused unnamed "leading comrades" on the local party committee of defying explicit instructions from Chairman Mao Testung liceus-ing grass-roots criticism of the party hierarchy.

The local party leaders "tore

They also charged the committee leaders with ordering the removal of posters mounted inside buildings during the anti-Confucius campaign. It was this theme that they returned to yesterday accusing the local party bosses of continuing the harasement even after the Politicaro, the supreme organ of party pow-er, had approved the posting of criticisms in specified public places in Paking

The new posters greet an All-Peking People's Daily, commemorating the 53d amiversary of the founding of the Communist party. The editorial seemed to throw the party's weight behind the poster writers by declaring: "It is essential to give firm support to the proletarian revokutionary spirit of the masses and welcome their criticism and supervision-This is a sign that our party and siste are flourishing." Miss Hy charged that the local. party-leaders had defied this policy. "Though they have said many times that they would warmly welcome criticism from the masses and respond to it in a sincere fashion, what they have done is in direct contradiction of what they had said," she wrote. It is apparent that there are forces at work that strongly object to at least some of the posters, to the point of tearing them down, often within an hour or two of their appearance.

There have been numerous oceasiens when someone has been seen stepping out of a crowd to rip down a poster that the group had been reading. It is perhaps revealing that others in the crowd usually re-main mute, although the act of destroying a poster seems to be a negation of the principle of free speech that the poster campaign

Mr. Dash, without confirming or denying that Sen, Ervin had called about the matter, said that questions had been raised about whether Sen. McGovern had been treated fairly. He said that the staff would

"If they're working something out, it's being done unilaterally." Mr. Thompson said.

The draft report was written by a Republican staff member, and had been edited and endorsed by assistant Democratic counsel David Dorsen before it was circulated to committee members and leaked to newsmen last week. It said that Sen. McGovern's campaign aides had shifted $340,-000 in lettover presidential cam-paign funds to Sen. McGovern's 1974 Senate re-election race at the same time that campaign creditors, including corporations, 000 in bad debts from the presidential campaign. It said that this may have violated at least the spirit of the federal law prohibiting donations to federal campaigns from corporations.

John Holum, a McGovern aide. said that he had contacted Mr. Dash and Mr. Dorsen about the report after it was leaked. He called it "a cheap shot," and said that the main McGovern campaign committee actually had been in the red at the time that it settled some of its bills for less than the full amount.

Mr. Holum said that money was transferred into Sen. McGovern's Senate race on orders from many state and local finance officials who left Sen. McGovern no choice in the matter.

Mr. Dash said that only the full committee can decide whether to leave the McGovern draft intact in the public report. Normally, Sen. Ervin reviews draft reports before they are circulated to committee members for comment, but Mr. Dash said that Sen, Ervin did not see the Mc-Govern section in advance because it was drawn up and distributed hastily since senators were leaving Washington last week for the July Fourth recess. # Civil Control Of Military Seen Strong

Moorer Affirms Policy, Retires as Top Officer

By Michael Getler WASHINGTON, July 3 (WP). -Adm. Thomas Moorer, the retiring chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, yesterday labeled as "nonsen; a in its purest form" the notion that civilian control over the military was being erod-

Speaking at a retirement ceremony at Andrews Air Force Base ring his 45-year navai career and four years as the nation's top military officer, Adm. Moorer told several hundred guests that "military men like the Constitu-tion the way it is."

"I don't know why this issue continues to be raised," the 62-year-old admiral said. "But one day I read that the joint chiefs are weak and never consulted and another day that they are controlling the country and are seeking to frustrate the policies of the commander-in-chief. Both of these allegations are nonsense in its purest form."

Adm. Moorer, a 1933 Annapolis graduate, became the only acmiral to command both the At-lantic and Pacific fleets. But early this year, disclosure that a sailor and two admirals working in Adm. Moorer's liaison office at the White House had reportedly obtained secret documents and passed at least some of them back to Adm. Moorer's office in the Pentagon brought controversy to the last months of his service.

Difficult Atmosphere Those allegations of military spring on the White House, combined with the atmosphere created by Watergate and reports in 1972 of unauthorized bombing of North Vietnam have contributed to occasional conjecture that civilian control over the military

In June, 1967, Adm. Moorer was appointed by then-President Lyndon Johnson as chief of naval operations. In July, 1970, President Nixon named him to head the joint chiefs and reappointed him for another two years in 1972.

During those four years, Adm. Moorer spent much time explaining and frequently bearing the brunt of congressional frustration over the Vietnam war. Current and former civilian officials at the Pentagon say that, on several occasions, especially the 1971 and 1972 bombings of North Vietnam, Adm. Moorer was dispatched to Capitol Hill to defend and take the heat for what was entially a political decision to use U.S. airpower against Hanoi.

During secret 1971 and 1972 negotiations with Hanoi, he was a vital link for bombing orders given by the White House and generally objected to, but approved, by former Defense Secretary Meivin Laird. Adm. Moorer had maintained a close relationship with Secre-tary of State Henry Kissinger the President's national security adviser-through those years and it has been reported that the data passing was also a two-way street," with some material going from the Pentagon to the White House without Mr. Laird's knowledge.

The Senate Armed Services Committee, which investigated the alleged spying, last week issued a statement that "there is no shadow of blame or impropriety with respect to Adm. Moorer on this entire subject."

The man, sought for questioning in connection with the killing, was identified as Walter Brooks jr., an associate of Marcus Wayne Chenault, Chenault, 23, was arraigned Monday in Atlanta in the slaying of Mrs. King and a church deacon and the wounding of a parishioner.

In an interview published yesterday in the Dayton Journal-Herald, a man subsequently iden-tifled as Mr. Brooks was quoted is saying he and Chenault were part of an organization called "The Troop." Its avowed purpose, he reportedly said, was to kill black ministers and civil-rights leaders who members of the group felt had deceived and falsely led black people.

Asks U.S. Court to Set Aside Jail Term

Legal Group Sees Bias in Rap Brown Case

By Martin Waldron

NEW YORK, July 3 /NYT. -The federal court at New Orleans has been asked to set aside a five-year sen-tence given black activist Rap Brown on the ground that the Federal Bureau of Investigation set out to destroy him and other black leaders in the tunmer of 1967.

An attorney for the Center for Constitutional Rights, a nonprofit legal group based in New York City, said the center planned to file a similar motion to vacate a state sentence Brown is serving in a New York State penitentiary.

In an affidavit filed with the New Orleans federal court, William Kunstler, an attorney affiliated with the center, said that Justice Department records show that the FBL under orders of the late J. Edgar Hoover, who was the director of the bureau. was ordered to use its "imagination" to stop the spread of black nationalism in the United States.

The FBI instructions to its field offices said that agents could use fabrications and other devices, including the arrestupon-arrest technique on any conceivable charge, to stop the spread of "black hate groups" and to prevent the creation of a Brown Mau-Mau' in the United targets.

States Copies of the FBI orders were released by the agency earlier this year after a suit by Carl Stern, a newsman with the National Broadcasting Co.

Other Programs

The Justice Department records show that the FBI also had programs under way to disthe "new left," the Ku Klux Klan, the Socialist party and the Communist party of the United States. Most of the "counter-intelligence programs" were discontinued in 1971, the Justice Department said.

The bureau's program to disrupt and discredit black leaders was created in the summer of 1967, at the beight of Negro civil-rights activity.

Although the original memorandums contained the names of several black leaders who were to be discredited to prevent "real Mau-Mau in America," all names were deleted from the documents before they were released by the Justice Depart-

His fiveyear federal sentence is not scheduled to begin until he is released from the New York State prison.

Local police and the FBI used the technique of "piling charge upon charge" in an effort to exhaust Brown's resources for bail money, Mr. Kunstler said.

1.300 Attend Rites For His Slain Wife

ATLANTA, July 3 (AP) .--Standing at the pulpit of his church and before the coffin of his wife, the Rev. Dr., Martin Luther King sr. said of the man who shot her. 'Let him come on back, he can't do anything but kill this broken old heart."

The grief-stricken minister spoke to 1,300 mourners today at funeral services for Mrs. King. A young black gunman leaped to his feet Sunday in Ebenezer Baptist Church, shooting wildly and killing Mrs. King, 70, as she played the organ. At the services in the same church, Dr. King. 74, leaned heavily on the pulpit. flanked by his grandson, Martin 3d, and a son-in-law.

"She was more than my vite, she was my heart," he said. Grasping the hand of Martin, 17, the senior King then led the audience in singing. "We Shali Overcome"—which his son Martin Luther King jr. and his fol-lowers sang when the civil rights movement was at its height in the South. The song brought tears to many mourners, some of whom linked arms and swayed with the

About 3,500 persons 22thered outside the red brick church in downtown Atlanta to hear the eulogies and hymns sung during the 21,2-hour service.

The outpouring of tribute ranged from grief to humor, and at times was jorous. Throughout, Mrs. King was recalled as a strong, warm woman with a sense

Among the notables present at today's service were Mrs. Gerald Ford, wife of the Vice-President; Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter; presidential assistant Stanley Scott, representing President Nixon; the Rev. Jesse Jackson of Operation Push: Vernon Jordan, director of the Urban League, and comedian Flip Wilson.

Nixon Justices on High Court Solidify Into a Working Bloc

By Warren Weaver Jr.

WASHINGTON, July 3 (NYT). The four justices President Nixon named to the Supreme Court have solidified into a bloc that is increasing in both unity and capacity to produce a working majority for their views of the law and the Constitution

During the second term in which all four men sat for the full nine months, the justices appointed by Mr. Nixon voted together on 75 percent of the cases the court decided. This was an increase from the 1972-73 term, when they voted as a bloc 70 percent of the time.

Regarded as Conservatives

On all but one of the 108 occaaions when they cast their votes together, the Nixon justices formed the nucleus of a majority. The sole exception involved the Giordano case, when they toted in the minority to uphold some criminal convictions based on defective Justice Department wire-

The men the President added to the court during his first term are Chief Justice Warren Burger and Associate Justices Harry Blackmun, Lewis Powell and William Rehnquist, all regarded in verying degrees as judicial conservatives.

The justices who most frequently joined the Nixon bloc to form a majority of the nine-man court were Byron White, a Democrat appointed by President Kennedy in 1962, and Potter Stewart, a Republican named by President Eisenhower in 1959.

Justice White agreed with the Nixon men on 85 percent of their joint votes, a drop from his 94 percent average for the previous term, while Justice Stewart vot-ed with them 82 percent of the Democrats when they came to time, an increase from 75 percent the court-William Douglas, William Brannan, Thurgood Marthe year before.

The figures were compiled by The New York Times on the basis of 144 decisions during the October-to-June term. The justices have three more cases to pass on next month, involving Watergate and Detroit school integration, but the results can-not materially affect their overall 1973-74 voting patterns.

Democrata Less Cobasive

Justice Powell demonstrated the highest level of independence within the bloc, voting against his three colleagues nine times. an increase from six in the previous term. Justice Blackmun split with Disregarding Justice White's voting record as a "swing" justice, the three confirmed Democratic liberals-Justices Douglas, Brennan and Marshall-voted as a bloc 74 percent of the time compared to 71 percent in the previous term. Unlike the Nizon justices, however, 37 percent of their bloc votes were cast for a minority position.

The justices produced 138 signed majority opinions during the power reactors and fuel to Egypt and Israel has provoked a congressional review of ways to insure that no other country follows India's example of accepting help for "peaceful" nuclear purposes—India got help from Canada—and then on building a bomb. With the oil-price increases pushing many nations to consider nuclear power and with nuclear reactors now being built or planned by the hundreds, it is plainly past time for such congressional concern. None of the 29 countries to which the United States has given non-military nuclear aid over two decades has been found to have cheated like India. But as Sen. George Aiken, R-Vt., a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. conceded the other day, "we have been getting a little careless" in approving agreements for nuclear aid.

The immediate congressional reaction is good as far as it goes. Sen. John Pastore, D-R.I., joint committee vice-chairman, has introduced a bill to tighten congressional oversight—by assuring committee review and floor debate on civilian nuclear-aid agreements submitted by the executive and by permitting Congress to block the agreement by concurrent resolution in 60 days. This would in effect extend to civilian agreements the screening already applied to military agreements. It should have been done

The more important need, however, is to tighten the specific terms of the aid agreements. Here joint committe chairman Melvin Price, D-Ill., has pointed a useful way by indicating some of the "safeguards" that ought to be written into the new Egyptian and Israeli agreements. These would: give the United States control over reprocessing of fuel used in reactors; detail measures for physical security against theft of nuclear materials; prevent the transfer of highly enriched nuclear material, and block what has been called the "Canadian loophole" whereby

President Nixon's offer to sell nuclear India claimed that its blast was done for the "peaceful" purposes laid down by Canada. We do not claim to be experts on the substance of these safeguards. But we think the burden should be on the executive branch to respond to any reasonable questions on safeguards which the Congress may bring up. This is one issue on which responsible executive officials should welcome congressional grilling.

Beyond closer congressional scrutiny and more substantial safeguards, however, there lies a more difficult set of issues which the joint committee-disposed as it is to promote nuclear power-may not be so well situated to weigh. We refer to the area of policythe province of no one executive department or congressional committee -- where technology, economics and diplomacy meet. What is the United States' proper role in helping other countries to meet their inture energy requirements, especially when our own are still far from assured? If the United States does help, should it put its aid into nuclear power, solar power, oil or what? Should such help be put through bilateral or multi-national channels? Should political concessions be solicited, such as ratification of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty oran admittedly far-out idea for the Mideastagreement to share nuclear facilities on a regional basis?

We raise questions like these not because we have the answers but because in the Egyptian and Israeli cases, the administration seems to have committed the United States without fully asking them. The administration simply went ahead and made nuclear-aid pledges to serve the requirements of its short-term diplomacy. We do not at all dismiss those requirements. But the complexity and consequences of the issues at stake compel a responsible government to take a reasoned long-term approach.

Science in the White House

Worldwide drought and famine, the unsettling economic consequences of the continued energy crisis, problems of over-population, meteorological change—these are just some of the prospective by-products, as it were, of the sudden advances science and technology, engineering and medicine have made in the past century or so. We can't stop this progress. On the contrary, it has progress in science and technology, engineering and medicine can cope with the undesirable side effects of the progress that has already been made. We need more knowledge and know-how to keep this planet reasonably habitable. We also need a great deal more political wisdom to apply this knowledge effectively and cooperatively. And we need that wisdom on the highest levels of government and policy-making.

President Eisenhower was shocked into this realization back in 1957, when the Russions surprised him and the world by sending their sputnik into orbit. In response, he created the White House Science Advisory Committee and the post of science adviser to the president, which was ably filled by Dr. James P. Killian ir., now honorary chairman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. At that time, the President needed to be informed on scientific and technological developments to maintain the nation's technological leadership. The emphasis was on military matters. Today, the President needs to be informed and forewarned to help avert a different order of potential disasters by the wise and humane use of technology.

President Nixon, however, abolished the Science Advisory Committee a year and a helf ago, and with it the whole machinery by which the White House and such policy makers as the National Security Council could draw on the advice and help of the country's science and technology. The President was apparently peeved that many scientists were loudly critical of the Vietnam war and opposed the supersonic transport program. Scientists consider it imperative, however, that their best judgment on matters within their competence, untainted by departmental loyalties and bureaucratic inrisdictions, be available to the chief ex-

To this end, a committee of 13 leading scientists and technological experts, headed by Dr. Killian and working under the auspices of the National Academy of Science. last week urged the establishment of a Council for Science and Technology as a staff agency in the White House similar in size, power and scope to the Council of Economic Advisers. The new council of three eminent persons would seek the assistbecome increasingly clear that only more ance of experts in and out of government. Its chairman would serve as a member of the President's Domestic Council and the group would participate in the work of the National Security Council. Beyond injecting scientific insights and early warnings on matters of military technology and arms control, the council would assist in the scientific and technological aspects of foreign policy that are becoming increasingly important in a global economy of scarcity. It would further work closely with the Office of Management and Budget in the allocation of research funds and evaluation of development programs. And it would submit an annual report through the president to the Congress to illuminate, within its field of vision, the opportunities and problems that affect the nation and the world.

> The House Committee on Science and Astronauties, according to chairman Olin E. Teague, D-Texas, is drafting a bill along these lines. Vice-President Ford is said to be receptive to the proposal. So are a number of high administration officials. It is evident, however, that it is unlikely to be adopted under this administration if Mr. Nixon remains hostile to the idea, although the Killian committee concedes that "a given president may choose some other way of placing science in the White House) more in accord with his style." The current president, moreover, has other things on his

> Yet, we agree with the Killian committee that thoughtful consideration and some orderly way of assuring science's service to government cannot be long delayed. We cannot arrest rapidly advancing scientific and technological developments. The question is whether these developments carry with them side effects or by-products that are destructive or benign. No president can know this without the best continuing analysis and advice, close at hand,

President Nixon's Message From Moscow

By James Reston

NEW YORK-President Nixon is a great admirer of Woodrow Wilson, and when he goes abroad he tends to speak in the heroic idiom of the most eloquent American president of this century. This was evident in Nixon's television address from Moscow. Never mind the obstructions, the treacheries and blinked diversions of world politics. The goal is everything. Peace in our time and our children's time. All we need, Nixon seemed to say, is patience and goodwill—a through ticket and a sensible slow timetable to everlasting concord.

This was a reasonable, even an inevitable theme for the President's television message from the Soviet capital. For he was speaking to both the American and Soviet peoples and to the world. He could not tell them that he and Brezhnev had agreed on the control of nuclear weapons or the future of Europe or the Middle East or the freedom of Soviet citizens or world trade, so he fell back on generalities and ideals and arranged to keep the dialogue going. It was really his only course, and he carried it off

Getting Less

Summit meetings between leaders of great nations in the past have often been more disappointing and even disastrous. Public opinion used to assume that when the great men got together they had to settle something or everything would be worse than before they met. But people are more reasonable or cynical nov. They expect less and they get it. and are not surprised.

Still, there is a problem, tor in his approach to the Soviets, Nixon was far more generous than he is to his opponents at home. He lectured the Russians on the responsibility of power, on removing the causes of conflict, on the dangers of fear, on respect for the rights of all men, the weak as well as the strong There would always be differences, he said, different values and standards, but whatever the different strands, the fabric had to be held together. Power had

Nobody who has watched Nixon over the years could argue with this theme or even doubt that in that broadcast from Moscow he was anything but sincere in his yearnings for peace or his message to the Soviet and American peoples. Given his problem in the Kremlin, he spoke in the evangelical spirit and on the planetary scale of Woodrow Wilson, but back home he acts on the tactical level of John Mitchell

or Pat Buchanan. The Puzzle

This has always been the pusie about the President. He lives in the world of roles and not of realities. He deals with the pubbe relations of his mission to Moscow, with the objectives of peace, which everybody from Issiah to Karl Marx have agreed upon. But not with the means to his noble ends.

French Vineyards Under Fire

By Jon Winroth

PARIS (IHT) -In the past few years. French wine producers. have so blatantly ignored government regulations designed to chaure minimum quality control that they have brought down upon themselves the wrath of their own board of governorsthe Institut National des Appellations d'Origine.

The INAO-grouping producers distributors, dealers and representatives from the Ministries of Agriculture. Pinance and Economy ~is not an official government body. Its function is advisory and, in the past, it has tended toward complacency, overlooking more than overseeing.

But now that wholesale prices are tumbling and red wines from Bordeaux have come under a cloud-about 20 indictments are predicted in connection with last rear's scandal (IHT, Aug. 31)—the INAO has proposed a stiff reform program to the government. Its recommendations will become is w if the National Assembly passes a bill or if the minister of agriculture incorporates them into a decree. If enacted the reform program won't affect the 1974 crop. The vines were pruned :r. February, but reforms should begin making themselves telt at pruning time next year.

Meaning The reform program makes much of yields, hectoliters, hectares, reclassification. To the buying drinking public the proposed reforms will probably mean more truthful labels, ferrer "incredible" bargains and per-haps, better wine. Consumer prices are unlikely to fall.

The talk about yield per hecture has to do with the fact that a vine can pump up only so much mineral matter from the ground, synthesize only so much sugar. The rest of the grape is water. How a vine is pruned determines how many bunches :: will produce. The more bunches on a given vine, the higher the percentage of water in the grapes -with everything else that goes into making fine wine proportionately diluted. When a vineyard overproduces, the grapes are inferior, contain less natural sugar. To turn them into "acceptable" wine, the producer is obliged to add sugar.

Until demand-on the wholesale level-began tapering off this spring, the temptations and opportunities to cheat were often ico strong to resist. Regional INAO committees implement the French wine laws-and they are no more immune to temptation than the growers.

example, in the Beaujolais area more than twice the legal limit .50 hectoliters to the hectare wine was made in 1972 1.8 million hectoliters instead of the usual 700,000 to 800,000). About two thirds of this was ultimately given the right to bear the name of Beautolais. But growers knew they could sell the rest of ni-ior nearly the same price as they had got for their "real" Beaujolaus. True, this excess wine could only be marketed as tin ordinaire. But producers offered it to exporters at prices much higher than those for truly "ordinary" wine and just slightly under those for 1973 Beautolaus-and the two wines were equivalent. Once the exporter got it out of the country. he rechristened his vin ordinaire "Eeau;olais"—and no one was the wiser; both producer and exporter were cleaning up. Last fall buyers were begging grovers to sell them 215-liter barrels of Beaujolaus for 1.150 france. Today growers are offering the same wine at 800 francs a

Inflation

Why has demand slackened? Primarily because of inflation-Beautolais used to be a relatively cheap wine for the consumer. But a; $150 or more a bottle-in France-it is no longer an everyday wine.

The INAO-as a measure of self-protection-wants an end to overproduction and to the sort of wheeling and dealing that has been going on in the Beaujolais area and elsewhere-which, while within the letter of the law, does little for the image of French

The Names

Then comes the problem of "declassifying" production in excess of legal limits. To take an example from the Burgundy region, a grower with a plot in the Chambertin vinevard-which produces a very expensive grand cru-is entitled to make only 30 bectoliters of wine a hectare. But the permissible yield for Gerrey-Chambertin, the lesser communal appellation to which such a grower is also entitled, is 35 hectoliters to the hectare. while that for "Burgundy," a name to which the same grower also has the right, is 45 hecto-liters to the hectare.

Thus if such a grower produces 70 hectoliters to the hectare, the first 30 can be called Chambertin, the next five Gevrey-Chamberlin, another 10 Burgundy, and the final 25, rin ordinaire. But To take the most flagrant

> The INAO proposals would stop this kind of systematic declassification. Upper limits would be set by the national—as opposed regional-INAO board. Anv. thing over the limit would have to sold for distillation into industrial alcohol-it could no longer be sold even as rin ordi-

There would be no more declas-silication by stages. Either a grower would produce 30 hoctoisters a hectare of Chambertin and turn the rest over for distillation, or he would sell it as Gevrey-Chambertin or Burgundy. depending on how much he produced or declared. In any case, the excess would go to the

Lastly, the INAO would like to impose tastings of the final product—a plan that will probably take about five years to out into operation. This project would apply to every wine with an appellation d'origine controlec and if the wine did not meet the standards, the production would lose the appellation. In short, all

Will the INAO be able to impose reform? Probably. The Bordeaux wine scandal has undermined the prestige of the industry. The quality of French wines has suffered from excessive yields and consumers are beginning to object—and not just to prices. Enlightened self-interest would seem to dictate acceptance of admittedly severe regulations that are aimed at stopping severe

Bigger Trade Surplus

The balance of payments will continue to impose restraints on the domestic economy despite an improving trade balance, the research center said. It predicted the trade surplus will expand to $3.57 billion in fiscal 1974-75 from $788 million in the year ended last March

But the basic balance of payments, which includes everything but short-term capital flows, will still be in deficit by $5.07 billion this fiscal year against a $13.03 billion deficit last year.

In fiscal 1975-76, the center said, Japan's trade surplus will narrow to $3.2 billion and the basic payments deficit will widen to $6.9 billion.

The center said the 9.1 percent real GNP growth rate predicted for fiscal 1975-76 will be difficult to sustain in subsequent years.

The main reason for this is that the real growth rate of nousehold incomes is expected to advance only about 3 percent a year in the foreseeable future.

IBM to Join Satellite Venture

International Business Machines Corp. and Communications Satellite Corp. plan to Jointly acquire a one-third interest that Lockheed Aircraft Corp. and MCI Communications Corp. each hold in CML Satellite Corp. The remaining one-third interest in CML Satellite is already held by a Comsat subsidiary, Comsat General Corp. IBM and Comsat will pay MCI and Lockheed $5 million for their shares in CML. TBM will pay each company about $1.6 million and Comsat about $900,000. This, together with Comsat's earlier investment of $750,000 in CML, will result initially in 55 percent ownership by IBM and 45 percent ownership by Comsat General. IBM and Comsat say they intend to make "a substantial offering" of CML's shares to either other investors or the public.

Japanese Told to Be Less Aggressive, More Skillful calm nervousness in overseas financial centers, he said.

In recent weeks, many Japanese banks have been paying premiums over the best available rates in the Eurodollar market in order to obtain the funds they nancing purposes.

This has tended to put upward pressure on short-term rates in general and to cast doubts on the creditworthiness of Japanese banks. Both developments have contributed to the current un-settled state of overseas markets, the Bank of Japan official said.

The central bank spokesman said commercial banks have been asked to deal at 'he going rate and not to pay premiums to secure the funds they need. They have also been asked to be more adroit timing their borrowings to minimise upward pressure on rates, he added.

As of the end of May, Japaof $8.93 billion against net liabiliides of $3.46 billion at the end of December and against net assets of $53 million at the end of May 1973. In recent months, net overseas borrowings by Japanese banks have averaged about $1

Bank of Japan officials predict-ed a pronounced slowdown in such borrowings in the near future, however. This development could ease upward pressure on short-term Eurodollar rates and on rates in the New York bankers' acceptance market.

A slowdown in net borrowing is expected because Japanese imports have begun to level off compared with the totals three to four months earlier. Japanese banks borrow dollars for so-called import usance financing which runs either 90 or 130 days. This financing covers the cost of imports during their time of processing in Japan be-fore they are sold on the domestic If Japan's imports in July are about equal with the levels of February and March, commercial banks will need to roll over their existing dollar borrowings but not to increase them. It is possible for the Japanese to finance import usance from domestic sources, but the switch would involve an outflow from official reserves commensurate to the amount of the shift. In 1972, when Japan was running heavy balance-of-payments surpluses, the authorities engithe payments balance swung into deficit in March 1973 and the reserves declined sharply, they encouraged the commercial banks to again draw upon external sources for import financing.

In recent weeks, the Bank of Japan and Finance Ministry have to a certain extent shifted course back again by making more yen financing available. This should drain funds from Japan's reserves, which have been rising gradually since January.

The drop from first place is a benchmark in American oil industry history. pay on either time or savings deposits. The only exemption is on time deposits of over $100,000 -so-called certificates of deposit (CDs). Rates on these instruments currently range from about 11 3 4 percent on 90-day CDs to 9 1 8 percent for one-year maturities. However, trying to raise $850 million would certainly push the rates up given the tight money policy of the Fed and the credit crunch it is fostering. Citicorp, which is the parent of First National City Bank, has skirted these restrictions by offering its floating rate notes in denominations of $1,000, although it is restricting the minimum order to 55,000. In any event, such denominations are clearly appealing to small investors who do not have the sums to get into the CD market and find themselves blocked as to the amount of interest they can earn on their savings. Chase, OWD?T of Chase Manhatten Bank, is offering its notes in denominations of $5.000. Both the Citicorp and Chase notes are to have their interest rates computed semi-annually at one percentage point over the average weekly rate for inrecmonth Treasury bills, currently at about 7.5 percent. The notes on both offerings are to be repayable at par at the option of the holders. For its part, Citicorp insists that the money being raised will not be used by the bank but rather by its other nonbanking subsidiar!es. Likewise. Chase Manhatten Corp. said today that the proceeds of its notes will be used for corporate purposes, including the funding of short-term financing sctivities of its non-bank subsidiaries.

Impossible to Trace

Critics of the offerings, however. charge that it would be impossible Dealers said that selling was to trace the way in which the funds are used and that even if not particularly heavy, but the they do not go to the banking units the cash flowing to the parent companies other units will adversely affected sentiment and help relieve the pressure that Chase Manhaitan Bank and Citibrunt of the decline, with issues bank might otherwise have exdiate maturity area dropping by perienced.

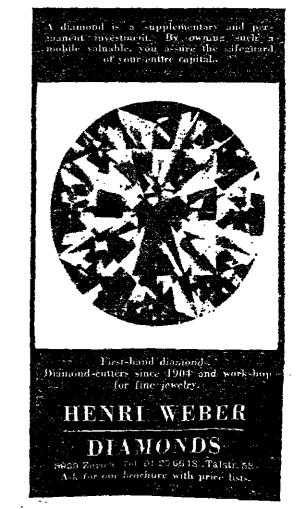

However, given that the money is being raised by the parent holding companies the Fed has no jurisdiction over the matter. It has pointed out that the only the Securities and Exchange Commission which must approve the registration statement.

A spokesman for the Fed said today that although the board had decided that the offering is probably not in the public interest at this time, the Fed has no legal basis on which to block it. The board did, however, recommend that the SEC require the bank holding compenies to disclose to investors that the proposed note offerings are not bank obligations and thus are not insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. In contrast, Treasury Secretary William Simon said the proposed offering of floating-rate notes is just another innovative way of financing in response to a period of high inflation rates and high interest rates."

ESSO S.A.F.

The Board of Directors and Auditors Report for 1373 were approved during the Annual Stockholders meeting held on June 20, 1374, under the chairmanship of Henri Lamaison.

The various Company's oil refineries processed 18.2 million lons of compared with 14.8 million tons in 1972.

Total sales of 16.4 tons of various products corresponded to 3.824 million francs, on increase of 22% compared with 1972. This progression resulted from an increase of 8.7% of the quantities sold and also from an increase of established prices following the increase in price During the fiscal year, the production of crude petroleum through its subsidiary Esso-Rep reached 929,000 tons and sales of crude petroleum and gas increased to 122 million Francs. These results

Including the 47.6 million Francs dividend received from Esso-Rep. the Fiscal Year shows a net profit of 58 million Francs, compared to 54.2 million Francs for 1972. This profit reflects an amortization of 248 million Francs and a provision of 312 million Francs reserved for changes in crude oil prices.

Francs, on increase of 77% compared with the average annual investment over the four previous years. These expenditures were essentially caused by the expansion of the FOS refinery and the development of the tanker flest.

Upon the proposal made by the Board of Directors, it was decided to distribute a dividend of 3.50 Francs which will be payable as of June 28 in exchange for dividend-coupon No. 40. The total dividend, including the amount prepaid in taxes, amounted to 5.25 Francs.

pride of the tragic hero in but dramatic episodes. Western literature that first . While warfare is the fav taught man to feel himself above or outside of nature. And from that beginning says Dr. Joseph W. Meeker, man went on to wreak his will on the natural world until he was brought up short by ecological catastrophe. He mastered nature only to discover that she was his mistress and he could not live without her. Though this and much else in "The Comedy of Survival" rests on some daring assumptions and sweeping generaliza-tions, Dr. Meeker has a diserming defense of his book. "A. hopeless attempt to see things whole." he says, "is at least as worthy as the equally hopeless task of isolating fragments for intensive study—and much more irteresting."

Humanism, according to the author, has so long condescended to the earth that it is shriveling up and dying from inattention. The morganatic marriage of man and nature can only be sterile. Nature needs love just as much as any other living thing, but mankind seems primarily interested in one-night stands. Because human beings are the earth's only literary creatures, they tend to give themselves airs, forgetting that the world has other wonders. The complicated matin; ritual of the whooping crane, for example, makes Romeo and Juliet seem like teen-agers necking in the back of a car. The assumption that nature is simple while civilization is complex is one of the sad legacies of romantic thought" If we persist in our tragic separateness, we may be the first species to understand our own extinction—a dubious privilege. But we are not yet lost: Literature has another, more cheerful trick up its sleeve, one that is ecologically viable, if I may introduce a new term into the jaded vocabulary of literary criticism, Comedy, Dr. Meeker maintains, is based upon a structure or strategy of accommodation with nature. Where pride goes before a fall, the comic character suffers only a pratfall. The proper study of man, he would say, is survival Fertility and equilibrium in all things these were the concerns of Comus, the god who gave his name to comedy. Fertility of invention and adaptation as against a suicidal stubbormess; equilibrium rather than playing the heavy and disrupting the delicate balance of things. The plcaresque hero, Dr. Meeker's sees himself as an animal in a wilderness of other animals. He muddles through, willy-nilly, enjoying his intellectual and emotional agility, the thatness, of shows a talent for adjusting towhat is While tragedy avoids or transcends the necessary to grasp at the impossible, comedy accommodates itself and lives to laugh another day.

Man is the first creature whose brain is capable of contradicting nature—and this is the root of his tragedy. He has used this enlarged organ, not to increase but to reduce his choices. for his daring has limits. As Dr.

unity is too narrow—it is a form of coercion, instead of an immersion in the flux of the universe. In our tragic role, we are 10 The Other Side of Midwhat ecologists call a "pioneer-ing species"—like weeds, rats or starlings. "Pioneer species are the loners of the natural

Dr. Meeker applies his literary ecology to "Hamlet," to the picaresque novel and to Danie's Divine Comedy. All three chapters are entertaining and persuasive but I would go so far as to call the section devoted to the 'Divine Comedy' convinc-ing. In the first place, observes the sufflor. Dante's own title was simply "Comedy"—it was a misguided theologian who added the word. "Divine" to what is actually a natural drama in Dente's work "human actions build their appropriate environment." Hell is the meeting place of moral and biological pollution. The air is so bad everyone squints, the water undrinkable. the flora dead or mained. Sin-ners are likened to birds whose wings are glued. Overpopulation is a further punishment. And finally, like so many of our con-temporaries, the condemned do not know that they are in hell. They are still so intent on their sins, so proud of their unnaturalness, that they suffer all these indignities as if they were inseparable from the human conditton.

For all his deflating of human vanity, Dr. Meeker ends on a con-soling note. Extending Mon-taigne's ideal, to live approprintely," he says: "Mankind's salent... is to understand where humanity belongs in relation to the rest of creation to dis-cover our appropriate role. Spir-tual and artistic creativity are not special powers provided so that humans can transcend the natural world but features of human biological development useful for commenting humanity more deeply with the place that is neither our stage nor playground but our only planet. our home.

Cruyff Ends Brazil's Bid, 2-0

DORTMUND, West Germany, July 3 (IHT).—The World Cup soccer final on Sunday, as many had expected, will be between the Netherlands and West Germany. The Netherlands qualified tonight with a bruising and fluctuating 2-0 victory over Brazil

It was a game in which the Dutch might well, through carelessness, have been behind at halftime. Afterward, however, the Netherlands mastered its nerves and the genius of Johan Cruyff brought them two superb . often thoroughly cynical. Players goals and control of the field. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger was watching from the grandstand, and there were moments when one felt that only his services as a peacemaker would allow the game to run its natural course. Both teams were on both sides were cautioned, but the Brazilian defense was cold-

Brazil, like the Netherlands, had its lapses, Only an astonishing one-handed save by Leao—Bra-zil's much criticized goalkeeper after six minutes prevented Cruyff from giving the Netherlands the lead. Had he done so, they would no doubt have been burning Ze Maria in effigy in the streets of Riv. After 25 minutes, a dreadful miss by Paulo Cesar Lina, who shot wide when Dircey stroked the ball through to him, saved the Dutch. A moment later, Jongblood had to race out of his goa! in characteristic fashion, to kick clear from Jairzinho.

Ironically, this was an excess of virtuosity by Jairzinho which almost gave Holland a goal. The center forward, who did much in the first half but next to nothing in the second, was robbed by

Brazil now had to come out looking for a goal, and with this brought off the now invisible Paulo Cetar Lina, after 16 minutes, and put the center forward Mirandinha. It made no difference. Within four minutes. Hoiland had scored again; a still finer Against all odds last night. Rosewall had come from behind to defeat Roscoe Tanner. Today he administered a lesson in tactics to the ranking player in the game. He never let Newcombe take charge and the weapon that he used most effectively to berate him was that sliced backhand, the Rosewall trademark, the like of which may never be seen again.

At the opening before the crowds trundled in, Rosewall won five games running, allowing Big-John five points. # Zaire Prepares to Enter the World of Heavyweight Boxing

By Thomas A. Johnson

KINSHASA, Zaire, July 3 (NYT).-On Sept. 24, at 3 in the morning here. this city's 20th of May Stadium is scheduled to hear the roar of more than 100,000 fans gathered for the first world heavyweight championship fight ever held in Africa. It is between the champion, George Foreman, and Muhammad Ali, the challenger. But the sounds now in the massive stadium that normally seats 35,080 soccer fans are those of jackhammers, power saws, paint scrapers and cement mixers, as well as the swishes of machetes being wielded by scores of gardeners. . Zaire, the copper-rich central African nation that was once known as the Congo, is virtually rebuilding its largest stadium for the fight. It is also creating a parking lot a mile long by one-half mile wide. We are going first class first class all the way," a government aide remarked. Officials do not, however, discuss the cost of promoting the event. Considering the excitement the scheduled battle has stirred among the 22 million Zairois, comprising some 200 ethnic groups, the value of the boxing bout to build the goal of "One Zaire, One Great Zaire," is regarded here as being well worth whatever the cost.

"Now." said François sadiy, "the Arabs have all the money and there are not enough of them to spread it around." I thought there were a lot of Arabs in the world," I said.

"There are," replied François. "but they are not the right kind. Only a few of them have any of the oil money. The King of Saudi Arabia, for example, who must have made $21 billion on oil this year, has about 132 sons and nephews. That means each son or nephew would have to spend $160 million for the rest of us to get even."

"That would be tough to do," I somitted. "Most of the oil sheikhs leave

"What's the answer. François?" "The oil kingdoms have to produce more Arabs, we have to start a population explosion program in Saudi Arabia. Abu Dhabi, Bahrain and Kuwait so the royal families will give birth to more princes."

Giscard d'Estaing's intervention in the Cité Fleurie battle pleases-and disturbs-those who have been fighting to save the artists' studios, gardens.

Saving an Acre of Greenery in Paris

By Jonathan C. Randal

PARIS (WP).-President Valery Giscard d'Estaing has saved one of the last privately owned corners of Paris greenery from real estate promoters.

In sparing the Cité Fleurie, an aptly named acre in the 13th Arrondissement, Giscard d'Estaing delighted the remaining residents of what was a flourishing artists' center before 1970 when a real estate promoter announced plans to construct a high rise apartment building there.

Giscard's personal intervention, however, was less appreciated elsewhere—especially by the Paris Municipal Council still recling from the President's rejection of plans to construct an expr on the Left Bank.

For the third time since he took office, Giscard had overruled decisions made previously by the council. The humiliating process is not new: Paris has not had an elected mayor since the fall of the Paris Commune in 1871. During his election campaign, Giscard had promised to restore Paris's right to rum its own affairs, a pledge to which he apparently no longer feit bound when the Gaullist city councilors did not re-elect Giscard's candidate as their chairman.

For Henri Cadiou, a painter who has led the fight to save the Cité Fleurie where he has lived since 1936, Giscard's gesture represented a welcome, but disturbing precedent. Cadiou is worried about the President's interference in the municipal council's business "I'm a convinced democrat and against any juit du prince as such meddling from on high is known," he said, "but it certainly is effective and I'd vote for Giscard in any election from here on in." Cadiou, who maintains that he hasn't been able to paint since the fight began, is fed up with the councillors. "Three times they've promised to declare the Cité Fleurie a protected monument," he said, "but they've never lifted a finger to help us effectively." Cadiou is still getting used to his victory. It has been a long fight. The SEFIMA real estate company bought the land in 1970 in legal fashion only to run into furlous opposition from tenants—the company planned to build a 10-story building with 140 apartments on the site.

Illegal Wall

At one point the company constructed a wall that prevented access to most of the greenery and to a side street. Two weeks ago, a court ruled the wall illegal and ordered the company to tear it down or pay $200 a day for non-compliance.

Since the beginning of 1974, the company has sent workers to pour concrete over the gardens, dispatched laborers to demolish the door of an 80-year-old tenant's studio, and tried to make the 10 unoccupied studios uninhabitable by tearing up floorboards. On each occasion, their representatives have been repulsed by Cité

Cadiou and his friends—and they numbered 25,000 or so-kept bringing fresh lawsuits which, if nothing else, gained time. Their biggest break doubtless was the death of President Georges Pompidou in April. Pompidou had little sympathy with such marginalis as the Cité Fleurie, whose two-story studies were built from leftover materials after the 1878 Paris Exposition was torn down.

No Modigiani or Picasso or Chagall ever worked in a Citéstudio and so it was even harder to make a case that the Cité Fleurie was a cultural monument.

But environment became a political issue with ecologist Rene Dumont, running as a leftwing presidential candidate, gaining access to the state television monopoly. During the campaign, artists and ecologists moved into the unoccupied studios—previous tenants had been scared off by the basele with SEFIMA. The police did not kick

Ombudsman

After Giscard's election the Cité Fleurie's plight attracted the attention of Pierre Beilemare, an unofficial ombudsman whose daily program on a semi-private radio station is called "Surely Something Can Be Done.'

Bellemare timed his program on the Cité Fleurie to coincide with the city council's spring session, suggesting that listeners write the President. Some 2,600 letters asking that the site be saved poured into the Elysee Palace.

To help the cause along, 5,000 people-including defeated leftwing presidential candidate François Mitterrand—attended an open house at the Cité Fleurie. A day later Cadiou and a friend were asked to the Elysee for a meeting with officials and 15 minutes with

The remaining obstacle is finding the $2 million which SEFIMA is believed to be asking as its price for abandoning its project. Even with aid from the city of Paris and the central government, Cadlou and his friends are upset about raising the money.

"Just think, the whole Cité Fleurie was worth only $10,000 in 1954," he pointed out. An acre in Paris is almost priceless these days.

Use of Land

Perhaps the most "wasteful" use of land were the artists studios which were once to be found all over Paris, especially in the outlying Left Bank neighborhoods. Official statistics indicate that Paris lost at least 500 studies to the developers from 1968 to 1973. Even before the buildozers came in in the 1960s, Paris had the smallest amount of greenery per inhabitant of any major Western capital. Rising land prices had done little to encourage environmental thinking until Giscard took office.

wouldn't be happy until SEFIMA abandons its plans to develop 15 acres of adjoining land which it owns on either side of the Cité Fleurie. On one side is a clinic and a large garden; on the other, six tennis courts and a miniature golf course.

"Just think," he said, "it was the first time since I started this battle that I wasn't kept waiting by an official."
